Who are you anyway?

Objective: To ask questions for relevant information from another individual and use that information to draw a conclusion to their identity

Materials: The cards are printed and cut a part. Tape the card on an individual's back or on a paper hat so he can not read it but others can.

This is a familiar party game to many. It requires an individual to ask questions of others in the group until they determine their identity. It is good for practicing many social pragmatic skills such as using good eye contact, asking appropriate questions, answering questions, and staying on topic.
