it's not just a subway station

In Nanjing, if you don't feel like walking, underground subways are the best way to travel. Fast, no traffic... And you might've never heard of this, but a nice place to eat out!

There are MANY subway stations around the world. I have visited Beijing, Shanghai, Shenzhen, New York, Paris and Munich subways. Why do I feel that Nanjing subways are different?

For several times, my mom and I visited many different subway stations in Nanjing. We found a feature in most of them. They are filled with different unique Chinese restaurants, and here and there, you can spot a little gift shop, dry cleaning store or convenient store. Also, for all of the outsiders visiting, Subway, Burger King, KFC, McDonald, Pizza Hut, Starbucks, French crepes, Scotland ice cream, and even a Japanese cuisine is there to greet you, just with a little Chinese taste on their menus.

In today's busy life, Nanjing subway stations create a huge amount of help. For instance, if you're on your way home from work, one stop at the subway station can get your dry cleaning, dinner, grocery shopping and much more done.

Even if subways CAN be a neat place to take a look at, but everything has their down side. Such as, one time when my family and I were riding the subway to get home after a long day, there was a real bad odor. It didn't smell very nice... A couple of days later, my mom read in the newspaper that the odor in the station that day was due to the fact that the subway sewage system wasn't built for all of the restaurants, and all the business. So some "stinky" stuff clogged up a pipe or two.

But if this stinky incident had never happened, Nanjing subway stations are an international dining that takes you places 😊
