“General research locates, excavates, and maps ancient cities. It fills museums and reproduces or copies inscriptions, symbols, pictures, statues. It deciphers unknown scripts and languages. It collects and catalogues manuscripts, and prepares critical editions of texts. It composes indices, tables, repertories, bibliographies, abstracts, bulletins, handbooks, dictionaries, encyclopedias. Some day, perhaps, it will give us a complete information-retrieval system.”

Method in Theology, 127

“... this initial movement toward our own “Magna Instauration,” which will necessarily include matters of tedious detail and grubby material arrangements...”

Frederick E. Crowe, The Lonergan Enterprise, 77

“... the past experience revived in the meaning
Is not the experience of one life only
But of many generations.”

T.S. Eliot, “The Dry Salvages”

With admiration and gratitude to
Bishop Robert Brom,
Jerome M. Dittberner,
and
Robert M. Doran, S.J.,
who helped me board the Enterprise.
