Important Notes: Before one unfairly criticizes the cost of my highly descriptive multi-million-dollar domains, I encourage any prospects to first ask themselves: can they or the companies for which they work afford the price tags? Secondly, have they fully considered the construct and value of a name that they did not conceive of and how that name might affect any branding initiatives they are pursuing in the short and long term? And finally, what would they pay the manufacturer of a custom-built home, an exotic luxury car, the most refined jewelry, or the perception of precious art, subsequently acknowledging that those material items mentioned can be destroyed right before their own eyes? Yet the value of a widely popular name can live on through humanity forever. For example, the name "Jesus Christ" is a living testament to that. Not until one has wholeheartedly weighed the attributes above and without further reservations can he, she, or it [being a company] literally understand the gravity and cost behind my domains.
