

Black Americans Losing Political Clout and Acquiring a Degraded Social Status by: (Readers Can Fill in the Blank)

In my opinion, Black Americans, and particularly African Americans, are being declassified by, and, in a basic sense, subjugated by, phased out by, succeeded by, manipulated by, inadequately educated by, diminished by, mocked by, having their inventions pilfered by, emasculated by, demonized by, ostracized by, made to feel less beautiful by, provided substandard medical care by, have been given higher incarceration rates by, are being underhandedly and/or overtly expunged from America's history books by, are being silenced by, are being systematically kept intoxicated on booze and recreational drugs by, are considered the axiomatic taxpaying class by, are being denied due generational wealth by, are hooked on consumerism by, have been largely relegated to less influential roles across corporations and various industries by (i.e., sports and other forms of entertainment), have been undervalued by, are often assigned token roles in corporate environments by, are being environmentally poisoned by, and lastly, but no less concerning, terrorized and murdered by. To put things into a greater perspective, first there was slavery, then the outward appearance of freedom conferred on African Americans (i.e., reconstruction, desegregation, civil rights, etc.), but the truth of the matter is that, regardless of how decisively respectable Americans would like to "unsow" the seeds of division and hate against certain minority groups across America, African Americans are still experiencing state-sponsored oppression that's just as prominent today as it's been since the founding of America and the Redemption Era that followed reconstruction. Needless to say, the mainstream media plays a significant role in sowing those seeds of division and hate between the Black community and its racial peer groups. Imagine the U.S. mainstream media, at any given time, having the clout to decide whether or not Black heterosexual men should be news anchors on any major television networks. But more importantly, African Americans and Black Americans in general need a dedicated 24-hour cable TV or streaming service that strictly covers the news in their communities. It's very unfortunate that this kind of dialogue is often censored by the powers that be and/or even sidestepped by prominent members of the Black community themselves, particularly Blacks whose riches, wealth, and/or livelihoods might hold them hostage to "hush your mouth" dogmas or else forego your cushiony lifestyles. African Americans, take heed now. As I warned Elon Musk about his error in judgment to purchase Twitter and the media fallout that would follow, I am now warning you about mainstream media's clandestine strategy to make you and your politics less relevant in the 21st century and subjugate you to a more acquiescent minority group that it can influence and control. Whoever that minority group may be, I'm confident that African Americans will discern their emergence. All things considered, particularly for Black Americans, any overindulgence in consumerism, to say the least, is never a healthy economic position to be in. Likewise, bowing out the national recreational booze and drug ethnic cleansing intrigue and trading that conspiracy for the business of cultural self-preservation is a far better strategy. It goes without saying that African Americans in particular have been called ingrates and even marginalized in many regards for being "uppity." One of the things that can be done to help African Americans remain politically and socially relevant in a country that its ancestors built is to adamantly get behind the news monitoring and censoring venture "all things STUPID about the news," which can play a central role in preserving Black Americans' collective voice while holding the media accountable for any schemes it leverages against Black Americans to ultimately bolster its bottom line. Word to the wise: "woke!" Sometimes who gets rich for what they contribute to society is purely a destiny's call, and sometimes, resting on the notion that it was such a call, money ought not to matter as much as peace of mind does. Similarly, perhaps the money provided for that peace of mind would never be equal in value to the peace of mind acquired.
