The “Black National News Network” (BN3) is Essential to the Black Narrative and Black Recognition Challenges of the 21st Century

For Black news junkies and those who are concerned about issues that are either constructively affecting and/or afflicting the broader Black community, then “BN3” would be a brilliant, highly competitive, world-class brand that not only holds some of your most concerning intellectual interests but also communicates them in a way that reflects the best of the Black community’s spirit. Any powers that be or those who are paid off as gatekeepers to oppose, resist, or suppress the visions hereinabove likely have no sincere interest in a well-informed Black society.

Perhaps similar to the lack of narrative control that the broader Black community is faced with today, Black people were poorly informed of the socioeconomic conditions that had enveloped and afflicted them during slavery and many decades later. Categorically against their will, slaves were held in a form of "intellectual darkness" whereby "slave codes" made it illegal for them to read or write. Hence the American mainstream media lacks continuing interest in issues that afflict the broader Black community unless they are highly profitable and promotion-worthy.

Due to the lack of ownership of any robust cable TV news service, BN3 would help fill an enormous void for Black people worldwide. More importantly, BN3 would endeavor to be a cable news TV service that does not gloss over or disregard the innumerable number of news stories that are meaningful to the Black community. The network would also focus on a slew of outstanding achievements that give credit to the broader Black community and what it consistently contributes to world societies.
