The most daunting thing about writing a thesis paper is not the writing but the literature search. The quality of a research paper is dependent on the data that you have gathered. Although the herculean task of literature gathering has been made quite easy with the advancement of technology and the internet.

In old times, students have to spend days in libraries to gather the right literature. However, even today a plethora of literature is available on the internet on every topic. Though finding the right material is still a gruesome task. This has been made easy by the google scholar. You can easily find academic journals and books on google scholar. However, you still need to know some hacks of using google scholar to avoid repetitive results.

Create your own keywords

For unique thesis writing, you need unique literature and to search unique literature on the internet, you need unique keywords. Many students give in the temptation of using popular keywords and hope that they will find useful information. However, they only find repetitive and generic search results. To avoid this, you should take some time and create your own keywords. For that, you should try to learn about one aspect of the topic individually. Divide the topic into different parts and create a list of unique keywords or phrases that will give unique and useful search results.

Note: If you are not familiar with a topic, you should first familiarize yourself with it by looking it up on the encyclopedia or other web Essay Writer.

Search in an incognito window

You know Google has the data of your previous searches on your personal computer and other devices. Therefore, whenever you search for a topic in standard mode, it shows results based on all the data that it has on you. Your search results would be based on various filters like your browser history, previous google searches, etc. This feature is quite helpful if you are searching for news or fun things on google. However, this is bad for the literature search. After sometime google might not show you even the recently published journals related to your field of study. Therefore, going into an incognito window is always a good option.

Create your own library

I am not asking you to print all the relevant journals and stack them up in a Write my essay. The google scholar allows you to create a library of your own and you can add search results that you find important and relevant to your research into the library. This way you will be able to easily access those journals or searches if you ever need them again.

Look into related articles

Sometimes you find a very informative and useful article in google search and you wish you can find related articles like this topic. Well, you can do that by simply clicking on the “related articles” that appear below every google search. You can keep digging into the related articles that google suggests you, to find more useful and relevant sources.

Quick citations

Creating a work cited or references page at the end of the thesis paper is such a drag. You have to fill different entries to cite a source. Well, google scholar has made it way easier for the students. One can easily find readymade citations of the articles that they have used in the paper by simply clicking on the cite button under the google search that is represented by double quotation marks.
