

The Forest Underground:

Hope for a Planet in Crisis

by Tony Rinaudo

How do you regreen millions of hectares of land without planting a single tree? The remarkable discovery story of Farmer Managed Natural Regeneration (FMNR) is told in Tony Rinaudo's new autobiography, The Forest Underground: Hope for a Planet in Crisis, to be published in April 2022 by ISCAST—Christians in Science and Technology.

This book offers tangible hope for climate change through a powerful testimony of God's grace and guidance. In a seemingly hopeless crisis, this is the good-news story that will move hearts and hands to care for God's creation.

About the Author:

In his 17 years in Niger, missionary agronomist Tony Rinaudo discovered an embarrassingly simple method of regreening land without planting a single tree. This is not some green fantasy. The technique he pioneered—together with local farmers—came to be known as Farmer Managed Natural Regeneration, or FMNR. It has since regreened more than 25 million hectares of land across 27 countries, reduced our carbon footprint, and transformed millions of lives and livelihoods.

For his influential contributions, Tony has received the Right Livelihood Award and was appointed as a Member (AM) of the Order of Australia. He is now the Principal Climate Action Advisor with World Vision.

Key Benefits:

1. Offers real hope for climate change
2. Tells an inspiring and encouraging Christian story
3. Calls readers to act by supporting FMNR

Audiences:

- People interested in climate-change
- Those interested in powerful stories of faith
- Those in the field of agriculture or development
