The Green Survival Campaign spread across North America with the message that "each individual can have a positive, meaningful effect on the quality of life by planting trees and other living plants."

"World afforestation is necessary because it is the most constructive and peaceable enterprise in which the nations could co-operate," Dr. Baker wrote in 1949..."It would check, stop, and reverse the advance of the deserts upon the good lands of the globe, and thus relieve the shortage of foods" (One Country, 1994)
