SER. NO. 99-025,190, FILED 01-31-2025

Trademark Registration

The Coordinating Committee for Ellis Island, the predecessor of the current program, filed the original trademark. Americans All acquired it, but the Committee failed to change the owner's name. When we received notice that the trademark had expired, I applied to reinstate it and paid the $350 fee plus an additional $125 fee for a 90-day extension. It was denied, so I then filed a new application, paying an additional $350 fee (and needing extra time, I paid an additional $125 fee). Total out-of-pocket expense: $950.

I used ChatGPT to complete the new registration instead of hiring a firm for $1,450 to handle it.

An official website of the United States government
Here's how you know

How to Amend the Filing Basis to Intent to Use Under Section 1(b)

To overcome a specimen refusal or an ornamental refusal, you may amend your filing basis to intent to use under Section 1(b), if a statement of use (SOU) has not been filed.

You will not receive a registration until you amend your filing basis back to use in commerce under Section 1(a). To do this, you must file an acceptable allegation of use (another amendment to allege use (AAU) or statement of use (SOU)) with:

(1) a proper specimen that does not show ornamental use and
(2) the required fee

If you submit the same specimen, the examining attorney will likely issue the same ornamental refusal again.

If you have already filed an AAU, you may withdraw the AAU; the AAU fee will not be refunded. However, as stated above, amending to an intent-to-use basis is not an option if you have filed an SOU after issuance of the notice of allowance. You may not withdraw an SOU.

For more information on amending the basis, see 15 U.S.C. §1051(c), (d); 37 C.F.R. §§2.76, 2.88; and TMEP §§806.03(c), 1103.

TEAS instructions for amending your filing basis to "intent to use":

To respond to a nonfinal office action, use the Response to Office Action (ROA) online form. To respond to a final office action, use the Request for Reconsideration after Final Action online form. The instructions provided in both forms are the same. If you need technical assistance with TEAS, contact TEAS@uspto.gov.

NOTE: The TEAS online form requires two signatures for amending the filing basis - one in the Declaration Signature section and one in the Response Signature section. The same individual may not always have the authority to sign in both places.
